

2019 NFL Draft Guide

97.5% by Sterling Hamilton and 2.5% by Brittany Lachapelle
with Statistics provided by Andy Troiano

Welcome Russian bots, cyborgs, Canadians, or (insert word here to describe yourself). I am Canadian, so I will just call you all football friends regardless of who you are.

I asked Andy (mediocre blogger at Gridiron AI) and the team to put together stats for me and compare them to some of the big sites like CBS and FantasyPros to see how the GridironAI ranks in comparison. This data allows me to create 3 different draft strategies to try and outsmart your fantasy football competition. For each of the draft strategies, I put the top 200 players and provided the auction values and ADP (courtesy of FantasyPros).

After you review the draft strategies and chose the one that best suits your needs, you can take a look at my TIER rankings. I find this is a great way to rank players and help balance out my team to remove a single point of failure due to injuries.

Of course, I am Canadian, so I have also provided you some guidelines of what your draft would look like depending on the strategy that best suits the two prevalent camps, WRs first vs. RB first, and a third option, The Canadian, which focuses on best available.

I am going to call them The Hare and The Tortoise. Full disclosure, I had this article political-themed but the editor at Gridiron AI shot it down, so I apologize for the uninspiring names

The plan will be to do one update after pre-season to account for any injuries or changes in contract situations (or lack of changes).

* All rankings below are based on a 12-person league. ****

The Canadian (Best Available)

“Let’s just be friends and not worry about which strategy is best, let’s just get the best”

Whether you are doing a Snake or Auction the goal here is to fill your roster with the best available player based on the ADP or recommended AUCTION VALUES. When you are doing this strategy, you want to make sure that you evenly spread your positions. For example, do not pick a 2nd Tier RB if you already have a STUD in that position. The order of positions you want to fill would go something like this: STUD RB/WR; 2nd Tier WR/RB (based on what you picked first); STUD TE; STUD QB; RB2/WR2 (based on who was your STUD) and so on and so forth.

Tiered Approach

The following are based on the Canadian way because let's be honest, I'm Canadian eh! I am about 51% sure it is the best strategy, which is why I will probably diversify my portfolio into multiple pools with different strategies.
